Dear Readers,

We are thrilled to announce that the latest issue of the International Journal of Sexual Science has been published and is now available to you, our esteemed readers. Continuing our commitment to sharing cutting-edge scientific studies in sexual and reproductive health, this issue further enriches the global knowledge base with diverse and insightful research.

This issue features a compelling range of original articles covering various aspects of clinical and surgical health. The research presented includes an investigation into the incidence of erectile dysfunction following urological procedures, an analysis of the relationship between pelvic floor symptoms and sexual function in postmenopausal women, and a study on an innovative method for evaluating vaginal lubrication in pregnant women. Furthermore, we are pleased to share a unique prospective study on the changes in sexual function after cataract surgery, as well as a clinical examination of periclitoral abscess as a rare cause of vulvar pain.

As the International Journal of Sexual Science, we strive to be a dynamic international publishing platform that continually evolves with contributions from academics and health professionals. We sincerely invite all researchers to submit their articles to our journal and join us in our mission to advance the field of sexual science.
